Magistra welcomes both new subscribers and new material for publication. In addition to original articles, translations of texts from original sources or about women's spirituality, as well as book reviews, will be considered by our editorial readers.

Those submitting translations are responsible for copyright permission from any published source and should provide biographical information about the original work's author.

Manuscripts should not ordinarily exceed thirty double-spaced pages and should be digitally submitted as a Word document.

Copies of new books by publishers in relevant areas are also welcomed for review.

Magistra

A Journal of Women's Spirituality in History

the wisdom of women
from all faith traditions
and all centuries

The only journal of its kind...

... a journal that increases awareness of the contributions made by women in the history of spirituality. There is much to be explored in those areas of spirituality considered “feminine” in its broadest sense, whether taught and practiced by women or men. There is a growing appreciation of the role of these spiritual writings in the fields of history, literature, women’s studies and other areas of the arts and humanities.

Margot King, with her creation of VOX BENEDICTINA, first saw the need for such a journal and brought its readers quality scholarship for ten years. When it looked as if the end of that journal would leave the gap open again, former associate editor, Judith Sutura, OSB, and other concerned scholars took up the tradition under the title MAGISTRA. Now it has itself passed twenty-five years of publication and continues to provide a vehicle for the study of the spirituality of women.

Inside you’ll find

- ✘ 2 issues, summer and winter, in journal format, more than 100 pages per issue of articles and reviews
